Another thing to mention is Crysis 2. The efficacy of manual debridement with povidone-iodine in the management of diabetic foot ulcers: a randomized controlled trial. To study the efficacy of manual debridement in the management of diabetic foot ulcers (DFUs). Sixty patients who met the criteria were included in this randomized controlled trial (RCT). Patients were randomly allocated into 2 groups, with a 1:1 allocation ratio. Both groups received topical saline solution and compression bandaging in the first session, and in the second session, they were either received a single application of povidone-iodine (experimental group) or they were debrided with sterile swabs (control group). The primary outcome was the decrease in wound area at the end of the second session compared with the first one. Secondary outcomes were a reduction in the microbial load of the samples, time to the complete closure of the wound, the time to the first debridement and the number of debridement procedures needed. The study comprised 60 patients, who were randomized into 2 groups of 30 patients each. After 2 months of observation, the average reduction of wound area in the control group was $27.7 \pm 9.9\%$, whereas the average reduction in the experimental group was $35.3 \pm 12.0\%$. The average time to wound closure and time to the first debridement were shorter in the experimental group (p<0.05). The endovascular approach for transcatheter closure of secundum atrial septal defects in children. Transcatheter closure of secundum atrial septal defect is preferred in selected patients with symptomatic symptoms. We aim to evaluate
