List of animated television series of all time. Contents.[edit].(CNN) -- A school board in Indiana has unanimously approved a proposal to teach creationism alongside evolution in high school science classes. The Freedom from Religion Foundation filed a complaint after the New Albany-Floyd County Public School Board approved the controversial proposal at its regular meeting Monday, citing the First Amendment of the Constitution. The foundation's Danielle Miller, a legal representative, told CNN it is "unacceptable" for the board to endorse "creationism, which is really just young earth creationism. "This is about promoting a religion," Miller said. The board unanimously approved the proposal, which was introduced last month, to teach creationism along with evolution in an alternative "biology class." The proposal states that evolution is just one theory, not a fact, and is not scientific. The four-hour course would also teach students about the history of science, and "the Judeo-Christian roots of science." The committee noted that some creationists believe the universe was created in six days, meaning it took about 6,000 years to reach current state. The bill passed 8-0 and would cost $1.7 million over three years. "[This class] is equivalent to the creationist class we're trying to prevent from being taught in the first place," Miller said. The board's chairman, Don Williamson, said the proposal is legal because it is not endorsing religion and is just educating students on the topic. "As a Christian, I certainly would take this class," he said. An attorney representing the board, Brandon Bloomfield, said the course would not teach the Bible as a science textbook and only teach information related to creationism. The proposal must be approved by the school superintendent before it can be implemented.Tag: Grateful Would you like to build a future where compassionate people don't fear immigration, but welcome immigrants in a way that honors and respects their work ethic, their contribution, and their wellbeing?
